Caprio on Martha's Vineyard for conference

General Treasurer Frank T. Caprio is visiting Martha's Vineyard this week. But don't expect him to log much beach time.

Caprio is one of three state treasurers invited to deliver opening remarks at the World Pension Forum, a three-day conference that focuses on educating officials connected with public and corporate pension trusts and endowment funds.

He'll join Massachusetts' Tim Cahill and Connecticut's Denise Nappier in offering welcoming remarks to this year's participants. Caprio will also moderate a panel discussion titled "New Frontiers in IT," according to his office.

"The chance to moderate a discussion on advances made in Internet technology is very exciting," Caprio said in a statement. "Advances in IT have streamlined government, while also offering a more efficient way of interacting with the public. It has been my priority in the Rhode Island treasurer's office to modernize the way we do business through new technologies, which in turn saves taxpayers money."

Speaking of money, Caprio's office reports that no state funds will be used to finance his trip.
